GAME WARDEN IN THE FAR NORTH NO SOFT SNAP

(Correspondence Associated Press)

NEHANA, Alaska, May 18.—Thirteen hundred and eighty-eight miles by dog sled marks the trip just completed by Game Warden Stephen Foster, whose journeys carried him into little known parts of the McKinley national park and other regions.

From Nenana to McGrath, on the Kuskokwim river, Foster traveled the 335 miles distance over country seldom visited, and over unbroken trails, his trip here alone indicating that the way of the game warden in Alaska is no sinecure. At McGrath a United States commissioner holds jurisdiction over a vast sweep of country where Foster found wholesale game violations. Fourteen white men were convicted and fined and the hunters required to cure and take care of the large quantities of wild meat found in caches in the mountains. In the states, the lucky hunter also would have lost his game, but up here the waste of good meat is considered almost as much a crime as the illegal slaughter of it.

In the Kantishna country, for instance, the warden found 74 quarters of caribou and the carcasses of a dozen cow moose in one cache. As there was no federal commissioner available, prosecutions were not in order, but the hunters were compelled to cure the meat.

Disease has made heavy inroads on the big game of the upper Kuskokwim, Warden Foster reported. A peculiar disease has attacked the moose and even arrested the growth of their horns, which in some cases, he found, were but the size of a man's hand. Mountain sheep were reported dying by the dozens with a disease known as lump jaw. Forest fires in the district have driven the once large herds of caribou out in search of food. Large ingrating herds were seen making their way towards Lake Minchumina.

Nesting places of the grouse and other game birds have been widely destroyed as well by the fires, the warden said.

MANY COMPANIES

IN DIVIDE NOW
In the Divide district 278 mining companies have filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state and over 100 more names have been reserved by companies that expect to file in the near future. All the companies have filed their articles since January 1.

CLEVER BRAMER SHOWING SPEED

Interest in the 25-round battle between Harry Brainer and Eddie Ketchell on the afternoon of the 4th is at fever heat and hundreds of fight fans are daily crowding the training quarters of both little gladiators.

Eddie Ketchell, who is plugging away underneath the Tonopah Club has the fans guessing. The lad shows a world of class. In his boxing with trainers, he does not evade the straight jabs to the face in a manner that one who hopes to cope with a lad of Brainers ability should. Harry has a nifty left fin and with his natural speed, can just jab his way into a lead over a majority of the featherweights boxing on the coast today.

Ketchell points out that he has boxed the best in the east and no one of them have actually made him swallow left jabs. When the bell rings, says Eddie, it will be Brainer that will be stopping punches.

There will be a switch in the training quarters today. Brainer will take possession of the Tonopah club at 3 o'clock while Ketchell will take his sand bag over to the Casino an hour later.

NEW COMPILATION OF LAWS BEING PREPARED

E. T. Patrick has begun the preparation of copy for the compilation of the statutes of Nevada and the digest of Nevada supreme court decisions and the book will make its appearance as soon as the forty-second Nevada report is ready.

The compilation of statutes, digest and annotations will appear in one volume and will be volume three of the compiled laws.

The last legislature passed a bill authorizing the work and making an appropriation of $3500 to cover it. The volumes to be prepared by Patrick and George B. Thatcher. The state printer is to print and bind the volume.
